The Second Book of the Book of the Book of the Prophet

1:7 The words of Hamath, a man of Habor, the chief of the household of the Prophet, which had borne the burden, and the bed of the rest, and the praise of God toward him: 1:8 With whom he had delighted: he was a goodly man, and had compassion on his household:

1:9 But he had no right to desire burdens: therefore he came unto Habor, and said unto him, 2:1 Let my lord be content, and let me not, that is, make at my house a continual labour, which I should not have done.
